

How do the Channel spaces illustrate globalisation processes ?

Document 1 : A caricature on migrations going through the Channel.

Source: Tjeerd Royaards, Joop.nl, 30th July 2015

Document 2 : Extracts from post-Brexit fishing rights up for debate between EU and UK, by Ryan Thompson & Oliver Whitfield-Miocic, 5th March 2020.

Tense post-Brexit trade negotiations between the UK and the EU have begun and one of the most contentious topics is fishing rights. The British government has touted their main goal as "taking back control" of UK waters. Current EU law allows fishermen to use the waters of other member states under the Common Fisheries Policy. Industry leaders in the UK have long complained that puts them at a severe disadvantage.

The EU wants to keep the current arrangement in place but London is demanding yearly negotiations with Brussels. "Our fishing waters are our sovereign resource, and we will determine other countries' access to our resources on our terms," Cabinet Office Minister Michael Gove said.

The fishing industry only accounts for around 0.1 per cent of Britain's GDP. "If we go to war, it's quite obvious that the British would lose out on the European Market," said Olivier Lepretre from the regional committee of Maritime fisheries. "They would not be allowed to sell their produce in France."

Source: <https://www.euronews.com/2020/03/05/post-brexit-fishing-rights-up-for-debate-between-eu-and-uk>